Seek Safety When Purchasing Energy-efficient Home Appliances

(ARA) Have government or manufacturer rebate programs enticed you to purchase a new home appliance? Before purchasing, it's important to consider all your options before you make a final decision.

According to an October 2009 survey commissioned by Underwriters Laboratories (UL), a leading independent safety testing organization, one in four homeowners involved in purchasing decisions independently reported they are likely to buy a large household appliance in the new year because of cash back offers for purchasing an energy efficient appliance during 2010.

The following tips can be used to help assess whether your current appliances are safe and assist you to make smart decisions when purchasing new appliances:

- 1. Only use as intended: Using appliances for activities other than what they are designed for can pose serious risks.
- 2. Trust your instincts: If an appliance smells, sounds or functions strangely—be suspicious. This is a likely indicator to replace the problem appliance or at least have it inspected by a licensed technician.
- 3. Look for safety certification: Safety certifications, such as the UL Mark, confirm a product has been tested and certified to meet the highest standard in safety.

Selling Your Home?

Easy Improvements to Attract Buyers

(ARA) A spare bath is a great investment. Second only to kitchen remodels for recouping resale value, bathroom additions boast a 63.5 percent rate of return, according to Remodeling Magazine's 2008–2009 "Cost vs. Value" report. And when an up-flushing, macerating toilet—or "up toilet"—is used for the project, its comparatively low installed-cost makes a bathroom addition very affordable.

An up toilet can be installed virtually anywhere in the home. That's because this type of plumbing system operates above the floor, using small-diameter piping to pump waste and water up, not down, and into sewer or septic lines. As a consequence, there is no need for the mess and heavy expense of digging through flooring, especially the concrete variety in the basement.

Macerating technology is ideal for adding a bath in tight spots. The simple installation process drives the cost savings. Best of all, this type of home renovation reaps instant rewards, improving the quality of life now and paying dividends later.
